The American Physical Society Offers a Free Trial Year of Membership

The American Physical Society wants to introduce physics students in the U.S., Canada and Mexico to the American and international community of physics by offering a one-year free trial membership. After the one free year, you may retain membership at a special low rate and continue to receive all student privileges while you are enrolled as a student.

Membership in the Society includes subscriptions to Physics Today, APS News, and access to the online APS Membership Directory. In addition, you may take advantage of Society journals and other publications (paper, online and CD-ROM) at greatly reduced subscription rates, network through a growing number of specialized units, receive career information and updates, and reduced registration fees for APS meetings.

APS also keeps its members informed on relevant government activities; conducts technical studies of issues related to energy, the environment, and armaments; works to improve physics education; and promotes equity of educational and employment opportunities as well as international cooperation in physics. Your active participation in the Society will help support the mission of APS and communication among physics professionals.

Society Journals & Other Publications at Member Rates

APS Members may subscribe to no more than three APS journals, excluding PR-INDEX and PROLA, for their personal use at APS Member Society rates. Online access to APS journals at member rates has a cap of 300 downloads per year for a single journal subscription and 450 for PROLA. Resale or institutional use of personal journals is prohibited for five years after delivery. Online: All paper subscriptions to PRL and RMP include the online version at no additional charge. CD-ROM compilations of Physical Review sections, PRL, and RMP are available; see www.aps.org/membership/cds.cfm for availability and pricing or contact the APS Membership Department. For a complete listing of APS Journals and other publications, visit www.aps.org/membership/services/index.cfm.
